"First of all, I believe that dressage should be the foundation for all horse sport disciplines.
But, I also think the dressage community would benefit from the skill sets that natural horsemanship principles provide." Walter Zettl

Electrolytes and the Performance Horse By Dr. Joe Pagan - January 11, 2013

Electrolytes are substances that play an important role in maintaining osmotic pressure, fluid balance, and nerve and muscle activity. These substances are important because without the proper electrolyte levels, performance horses are slowed by fatigue and muscle weakness.

During a routine workout, sweat loss in a racehorse amounts to between 5 and 10 liters, while losses of 25 liters might occur during a normal endurance ride.

In the exercising horse, sodium, potassium, chloride, and magnesium are lost in sweat and urine. Owners need to have some idea of the magnitude of loss of electrolytes during exercise before a feeding program can be developed to replace these losses. Since most of the electrolyte loss in the horse occurs through sweating, one method of calculating electrolyte requirements can be based on amounts of sweat loss. Body weight loss during exercise is a good way to estimate the amount of fluid lost, where 1 kg (2.2 lb.) of body weight loss equals 1 liter of fluid.

The amount of fluid loss will depend on a number of factors such as duration and intensity of exercise, temperature, and humidity. Therefore, the best way to determine this loss is to weigh the horse before and after exercise. This after-exercise weight should be taken before the horse is allowed to drink. During a routine workout, sweat loss in a racehorse amounts to between 5 and 10 liters. Losses of 25 liters might occur during a normal endurance ride, and 40 liters of fluid loss would probably only be seen in an exhausted, dehydrated endurance horse in serious danger of dying.

NDA is very excited to announce an upcoming symposium with Canadian Olympic dressage rider David Marcus. October 18–19, 2014

When researchers from the University of Tennessee and University of Georgia measured weight loss, water loss, and electrolyte balance in horses competing in a three-day event in New Jersey, they found that the 48 horses measured in this study lost an average of 18.4 liters of body water during the cross country phase of the three-day event. This occurred even though the environmental conditions during this event were fairly mild.

At the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta, several three-day event teams weighed their horses daily throughout the competition. Among horses on the three teams that won medals at this competition (Australia-gold, USA-silver and New Zealand-bronze), the average weight loss was 18.4 kg during the endurance day.

A major source of potassium for horses is forage. Hays typically contain from 10 to 20 grams of potassium per kg. When fed in adequate amounts, hay provides a great deal of a performance horse's potassium requirement. Besides providing large quantities of potassium, forage helps maintain water balance in exercised horses.

German research has shown that horses fed adequate forage maintained water and potassium balance better during exercise than horses fed a high-concentrate diet. Unfortunately, forage is very low in sodium and marginal in chloride. Therefore, supplemental sodium and chloride are required by the performance horse. A portion of the sodium and chloride required by the performance horse can be provided by a salt lick. Research at Cornell University has shown that horses at rest will voluntarily consume about 50 grams per day from a salt block.

Although it is theoretically possible to fulfill an exercising horse's electrolyte needs with plenty of good-quality forage and free-choice salt licks, many equine practitioners have reported that supplemental electrolytes are important and beneficial for maximum performance. Besides aiding in the prevention of tying-up, electrolytes help horses rebound from hard work sooner, return to feed quicker, and begin the necessary rebuilding phase that occurs after exertion.

While electrolytes are essential to the performance horse, electrolyte preparations must be properly formulated to meet the horse's needs. Equine electrolyte replacements should not be largely sugar, but instead should be formulated to replace what is actually lost from the horse during exercise. In summary, electrolytes are essential nutrients for the performance horse. Because horses lose large quantities of electrolytes in sweat, requirements increase with exercise intensity and sweat loss.

Adequate intakes of good quality forage and a free-choice salt lick will help meet much of the electrolyte requirements of the performance horse. In addition, a commercial electrolyte supplement can help prevent electrolyte depletion.

What really is classical?

By Hector Carmona

What really is classical? Is it a certain time period and/or a method of training? When the FEI came into existence and dressage became an Olympic sport, many horses were trained with a stiff or hollow back. It is safe to say that the majority were. All the history books indicate this fact. If prior to that, in the classical system, horses were trained giving the back, its' importance why was this not carried over? I don't know. The back started to gain popular attention in the late 50's and early 60's, but still many winning horses were not "over the back." I don't think we have nailed it yet. We began to, but then it got twisted. This all comes down to proper stretching of the horse. And I don't think it has been clearly defined as of yet and understood. Either the horses are strung out, or they are shortened in the neck. There needs to be a conference stating proper stretching and putting it in the rule book. I do believe one day the rule book will be relevant again. This proper stretching will have the scientific evidence behind it. We are at that point in time today. All of the information is available; it only needs to be compiled. That's not hard to do. We have healthy minds in the business looking at things objectively where the welfare of the horse is the most important criteria. We are coming close to arriving at this point. In many ways, it is evident with the ongoing battle to end Rollkur/LDR. We are ripping apart theories and then joining together to rebuild proper training techniques. I guess that's how we humans need to operate.

With Judy Varner at Middle Cross Stables.

Four Colorado horses confirmed with vesicular stomatitis

By Horsetalk.co.nz on Jul 19, 2014 in News

Four horses in Colorado have been confirmed with vesicular stomatitis, adding to the 11 horses and two cattle in Texas already diagnosed with the disease.

The National Veterinary Services Laboratories in Ames, Iowa, confirmed on Thursday that vesicular stomatitis virus (VSV) infection had been confirmed on two equine premises in Weld County, Colorado. Both properties have been placed under quarantine.

Three affected horses were on one premises and one affected horse on the other, according to the latest update from the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, part of the US Department of Agriculture. All cases involved the New Jersey serotype.

The laboratory confirmed the Colorado cases all met the case definition of VSV infection, with compatible clinical signs and either positive complement fixation antibody titers or positive virus isolation.

To date, 12 VSV-positive premises have been identified in Colorado and Texas. One property, in Kinney County, Texas, has been released from quarantine and there are currently seven other properties in Texas on a 21-day countdown to quarantine release.

Colorado State veterinarian Keith Roehr said vesicular stomatitis can be painful for animals and costly to their owners.

"The virus typically causes oral blisters and sores that can be painful, causing difficulty in eating and drinking."

Equids, mules, cattle, bison, sheep, goats, pigs, and camelids are all susceptible to the disease.

Clinical signs include vesicles, erosions, and sloughing of the skin on the muzzle, tongue, teats, and above the hooves of affected livestock – symptoms similar to those of foot and mouth disease.

Vesicles are usually seen only early in the course of the disease. The transmission of VS is not completely understood, but components include insect vectors, mechanical transmission, and livestock movement. While rare, human cases can occur, usually among those who handle infected animals. In humans the disease can cause flu-like symptoms and only rarely includes lesions or blisters.

Authorities says that veterinarians and livestock owners who suspect an animal could have VS or any other vesicular disease should immediately contact state or federal animal health authorities.

Livestock with clinical signs of the disease are isolated until they are healed and determined to be of no further threat for disease spread. There are no vaccines approved by the US Department of Agriculture for VS.

Strict fly control is an important factor to inhibit the transmission of the disease. Authorities also recommend against transferring feeding equipment, cleaning tools or health care equipment between herds.
